Mike Gordon Shot Dead On a Las Vegas Street

Accounts Name Doc Holliday As Shooter

By Richard W. Kimball

Mike Gordon, a former scout for the U.S. Army, was shot to death on a hot summer evening on July 19, 1879. He was shot through the chest while standing on a street outside Holliday's Saloon on Centre Street in Las Vegas, New Mexico.

Las Vegas was a sleepy little Mexican village in the northern part of the territory, but that all changed when the railroad came to town. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad bypassed the original town and located its main terminal on the east bank of the Gallinas River. The change forced many of the businesses in old Las Vegas to relocate to a new town site. As a result, the village was forever split in two—the original community on the west side of the river would be known as West Las Vegas and the town on the east became East Las Vegas.

When the last rail was put into place, the townspeople of East Las Vegas marked the occasion with celebrations and other festivities during the entire month of July. A huge crowd of people streamed into town to celebrate the completion of the first rail line in the territory. A large number of enterprises opened for business, which included new saloons and gambling halls, several dance halls, plus a large number of retail businesses, restaurants and living quarters. Most were hastily constructed frame buildings of raw wood; others were located inside canvas tents.

According to the Weekly New Mexican, "Merchants from the east jostled with laborers while the soft-handed clerk had for his neighbor a cowboy whose wide-brimmed hat and cartridge belt set off his good looks to best advantage. Contractors, traders, ranchmen, speculators, etc., etc. were there in force. The women who did the dancing were American and Mexican ranging through nearly all

In Their Own Words

Massacre at Wounded Knee

On the morning of December 29, 1890, the Sioux chief Big Foot and some 350 of his followers camped on the banks of Wounded Knee creek. Surrounding their camp was a force of U.S. troops charged with the responsibility of arresting Big Foot and disarming his warriors. The scene was tense. Trouble had been brewing for months.

The spread of the Ghost Dance movement revitalized the Indians and brought fear to the whites. The government responded by ordering the arrest of Chief Sitting Bull at the Standing Rock Reservation. Sitting Bull was killed in the attempt on December 15.

When he heard of Sitting Bull's death, Big Foot led his people south to seek protection at the Pine Ridge Reservation. The army intercepted the band on December 28 and brought them to the edge of the Wounded Knee to camp. The next morning the chief, racked with pneumonia and dying, sat among his warriors and powwowed with the army officers. Suddenly the sound of a shot pierced the early morning gloom. Within seconds the charged atmosphere erupted as Indian braves scurried to retrieve their discarded rifles and troopers fired volley after volley into the Sioux camp. From the heights above, the army's Hotchkiss guns raked the Indian teepees with grapeshot. Clouds of gun smoke filled the air as men, women and children scrambled for their lives. Many ran for a ravine next to the camp only to be cut down in a withering cross fire.

When the smoke cleared and the shooting stopped, approximately 300 Sioux were dead, Big Foot among them.

Emmett Dalton

Emmett Dalton, the only survivor of the Dalton Gang's disastrous attempt to rob two Kansas banks, began serving a life sentence in the Kansas State Penitentiary on March 8, 1893.

Born in 1871, Emmett was the youngest of the three Dalton brothers, who banded together to pursue a life of crime. Initially, his brothers Bob and Grat were reluctant to include Emmett in their crimes because of his youth—when the two elder brothers traveled to California to rob trains in 1889, they refused to take along the 18-year-old Emmett. After returning to Oklahoma several years later, though, Bob and

Arizona American Indians once depended on a large variety of wild plants. They included yucca which, minus its spiny leaves, was eaten after it was roasted in a pit and dried. Juice was used as water-proofing and people drank it to prevent scurvy. Nets, sandals and thread were made from yucca fiber. Another variety of the plant produced edible fruit. The roots were pounded and soaked in water to create suds for washing hair. Some Indians today still use yucca shampoo.

Those who saw Cochise, the Apache Indian chief in the late 1850s, said there was red paint on his face and he had earrings made of brass wire. A pendant of wire bent into a ring dangled from his nose. There was an eagle feather in his hair and he wore moccasins.

Clifton near the New Mexico border began as a mining camp in 1872. Today, the town has 47 buildings listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Flagstaff lived by the gun in the early 1880s. A man who was there remembered the sound of shooting at all hours of the night. "Many died those days with their boots on", he said. Men sometimes were knifed or beaten to death.

The brakes failed on a freight train with two steam engines and 31 cars traveling the downhill slope just west of Williams in 1897. The lead engine jumped the tracks and the second engine and the cars crashed into it. Three crewmen were killed.

At Camp Verde south of Sedona in 1904, most residents were short of cash. So they paid the local doctor for services rendered with hay, grain, pigs, chickens, ducks, a horse or a cow. Camp Verde got its name from a military post located there.

Western novelist Zane Grey's book, 'Wild Horse Mesa' was filmed in 1925 on the Navajo Reservation and at the Grand Canyon. The animal hero was a trained horse named Greylock. He went on to star in a series of silent movies as Rex, King of Wild Horses.

The Whitman Massacre

The career of medical missionary Marcus Whitman ended in terror and tragedy on a cold, wet November day in 1847 at Whitman's mission near Fort Walla Walla in Oregon Territory. For 11 years he had preached to the Cayuse Indians, but without much success. The Indians were growing resentful of the white men who crowded into Oregon, many of whom stopped to rest at Whitman's mission.

The settlers had brought a deadly gift: measles. To the Indians, who had never before encountered the disease, it was almost always fatal. Whitman did what he could to treat the victims, but Indian children died while white children recovered. To the grieving Indians, it was clear that Whitman was a sorcerer. While pretending to help them, he was thought to be secretly poisoning them with his medicines so that whites might steal their land.

November 29 brought bad news: three more Indian children had died. One belonged to Chief Tiloukaikt, who had already lost two others to the white man's sickness. After a funeral held by Whitman, Tiloukaikt and other Indians entered the mission kitchen. While the chief engaged Whitman in conversation, a warrior, Tomahas, struck the missionary from behind. Tiloukaikt hacked at Whitman's face; a third Indian shot him in the neck. After the slaughter was over, 13 whites staying at the mission were dead, one of them Whitman's wife, Narcissa.

Gordon Shot Dead

grades of good and bad looks. The halls were brilliantly lighted; music was furnished by excellent string bands for the dancers. Glasses jingled in time with the music and as was to be expected, many of the pleasure seekers were more than half seas over before the night turned toward the wee small hours."

Gordon was a 14-year veteran of the Army's Fifth Cavalry. He had been assigned to scout the territory's deserts and mountains. According to the Las Vegas Optic newspaper, Gordon was "known to have rescued many white people from savage Indians" during his military career. He had been a handsome and well-liked man, but that all changed after he left the Army.

"Gordon had been disfigured by the loss of his nose," the newspaper said. "It was bitten off by a gambler from whom he was taking money. His antagonist seized him with a grasp of iron by both ears and with his teeth wrought the disfiguration."

Although the former scout was considered by most people to be an inoffensive man, his demeanor changed dramatically when he drank. He drifted in and out of mining camps trying to make a living as a gambler. When he was drunk, he could be seen wandering around town incoherent and disorderly. He went looking for trouble and often found it.

It was difficult to know exactly how Mike Gordon was killed that day. The Las Vegas Gazette reported that he had been standing in the street when the fatal shot was fired. It was reported that Gordon had been drinking heavily for several days. Some people said he could barely stand upright without propping himself up against a wall or a post. He was seen near the new Close and Patterson Saloon and dance hall on Railroad Avenue boasting that he was going to shoot out the saloon's lanterns. But after weaving about for several minutes, the drunkard decided the dance hall was too big and staggered off down the street.

He was next sighted outside Holliday's Saloon on Centre Street where his girlfriend was a saloon girl.

Wounded Knee Massacre

Massacre

Twenty-five soldiers lost their lives. As the remaining troopers began the grim task of removing the dead, a blizzard swept in from the North. A few days later they returned to complete the job. Scattered fighting continued, but the massacre at Wounded Knee effectively squelched the Ghost

Dance movement and ended the Indian Wars.

The following is reprinted from Ninety-six Years among the Indians of the Northwest, North Dakota History, 15, No. 2 (1948) by Philip Wells. Wells was a mixed-blood Sioux who served as an interpreter for the Army. His account of the tragedy is as follows:

"I was interpreting for General Forsyth (Forsyth was actually a colonel) just before the battle of Wounded Knee, December 29, 1890. The captured Indians had been ordered to give up their arms, but Big Foot replied that his people had no arms. Forsyth said to me, 'Tell Big Foot he says the Indians have no arms, yet yesterday they were well armed when they surrendered. He is deceiving me. Tell him he need have no fear in giving up his arms, as I wish to treat him kindly.' Big Foot replied, 'They have no guns, except such as you have found.' Forsyth declared, 'You are lying to me in return for my kindness.'

During this time a medicine man, gaudily dressed and fantastically painted, executed the maneuvers of the Ghost Dance, raising and throwing dust into the air. He exclaimed 'Ha! Ha!' as he did so, meaning he was about to do something terrible, and said, 'I have lived long enough,' meaning he would fight until he died. Turning to the young warriors who were squatted together, he said, 'Do not fear, but let your hearts be strong. Many soldiers are about us and have many bullets, but I am assured their bullets cannot penetrate us. The prairie is large, and their bullets

Grat judged Emmett sufficiently mature to assist them in a string of train robberies that made the three brothers and their gang famous throughout Oklahoma and Kansas. By then, Emmett had a sweetheart named Julia Johnson, but he gave up his dreams of a normal family life to remain with his brothers. "What had I to offer Julia?" Emmett later mused. "I rode away. An outlaw has no business having a girl, no business thinking of marriage."

Emmett's wild days riding with his two older brothers were short-lived. On October 5, 1892, the brothers attempted a daring dual robbery of two Coffeyville, Kansas, banks in broad daylight. The plan might have worked had the citizens of Coffeyville not been alerted to the arrival of the bandits. While Emmett and Bob were stuffing $21,000 into grain sacks in one bank, the townspeople quietly surrounded the building. When the boys tried to leave, a barrage of gunfire forced them back inside. They fled through a rear door and managed to reunite with Grat and the other team of robbers, who were also under attack. In a back street, later named "Death Alley" by the proud citizens of Coffeyville, the gang was blasted by heavily armed townspeople. Bob and Grat were hit first. Emmett tried to pick up Bob, but as he reached down from his horse a bullet slammed through his hip and a load of buckshot hit him in the back.

Bob, Grat, and two other gang members died, and the people of Coffeyville propped them up for a famous series of grisly photographs. Townspeople carried the wounded Emmett to a nearby hotel and he lived to stand trial. Sentenced to life in prison, he began serving his time in the Kansas State Penitentiary in 1893.

After 14 years in prison, Emmett won parole and returned to society a reformed man. He finally married Julia Johnson and began a successful career as a real estate agent. When the couple later moved to the booming Los Angeles area, Emmett even found work in Hollywood as an authenticity consultant for western movies. He died in 1937.

Take A Territorial Road Trip To Fort Lowell

By Ralph Henderson

Tucson was originally a Spanish Presidio (armed camp) from about 1776 until 1829. At that time newly independent Mexican soldiers took over the job of providing protection from the Apaches. With the Gadsden Purchase in 1853, the people occupying the area became American citizens and the Mexicans departed leaving the walled town to the few Yankees in the area.

The U.S. army took over the protection of the area in 1856 with the arrival of the 1st United States Dragoons. The Apache Wars had begun in 1848 under Mexican rule and Tucson was right in the middle of it. In 1860 "Camp Tucson" was established in what is now the area of present Tucson where the Santa Rita Hotel sits. Unfortunately, with the outbreak of the Civil War, the Union was forced to recall its troops and camp Tucson was evacuated leaving southern Arizona undefended against the Apaches. The area was soon declared to be no longer part of the United States by the Confederate Constitutional Convention in March 1861. Being far from the action, this had little or no effect on the area and it returned to Union control when the California Volunteers pitched camp on the east side of town a year later. With no real troop strength, the post was too weak to be continued and was abandoned on September 15, 1864. After the war the post was relocated to the downtown Armory Park area in 1866 under the command of Captain Johnathan

Arizona State Prison - Florence

In 1908, eighteen inmates in the company of two or three guards got off a train at the Florence depot north of town and walked across the desert and the Gila River to the site of what was to become the new territorial prison. The inmates cleared the land and built footings for the prison wall and for buildings that they would later construct. With the coming of the territorial prison, a new direction was taken by the town of Florence. Money was available for material, but not for labor. Warden Thomas Rynning established a practice called two-for-one in which an inmate worked for two days building the prison and then received time off his sentence. Although the first inmate was assigned to the Florence prison in 1908, the move was not completed until 1912.

During the middle decades of the 20th century, many new buildings were constructed at the prison. Besides the acreage planted in crops, livestock was raised, and there were workshops for learning such skills as carpentry, welding, and auto mechanics. Administrators believed in prison self-sufficiency and in prisoner rehabilitation.

Often prisoners attempted to escape, and some succeeded. Up until recently, mounted guards and expert trackers with bloodhounds hunted through cholla, rocks, and dry riverbeds to chase down escapees. The prison at Florence held many dangerous men and, until the 1980s, women. Early on in its statehood, Arizona had no death penalty, but after a gunfight in which law officers were killed, the punishment was reestablished. Thereafter many convicted murderers were executed at the prison. Some were notorious to the degree that their exploits were known nationwide.

Here the walls of the first prison building are being built. The five buildings, part of the first construction, would house the cell block and facilities such as a dormitory, chapel, kitchen, mess hall, and hospital. Materials were brought by railroad to the Florence station and carted to the site by local residents.

Today the Florence complex of the Arizona State Prison is just one of several prisons in town, including private prisons and homeland security.

Gordon Shot Dead

Shooting

He went inside, grabbed her by the arm and told her she must leave with him immediately. He wanted to bring her back to the big dance hall on Railroad Avenue because more people were dancing there. When she refused, Gordon became angry and started shouting. When the bartender told Gordon shut up or leave, he sullenly went back outside where he continued his tirade.

The couple's loud argument irritated the several gamblers sitting at a corner table in the back of the saloon. One of the card players, sitting with his back against the wall, was a sickly, sallow-faced gent—a man named Doc Holliday. The ex-dentist from Georgia had arrived in Las Vegas a few months earlier and had formed a partnership with a man named John Joshua Webb. They pooled their resources and built a saloon on Centre Street. It soon became known as Holliday's Saloon.

When Gordon got back on the street, he continued his screaming. He yelled that he was going to kill somebody, or maybe be killed himself, before sunrise. He pulled his six-shooter and began firing shots into the saloon, trying to hit the lanterns that illuminated the establishment. One of his bullets slammed into the floor at the rear of the bar nearly hitting the bartender who was pouring a drink for a customer. Several more shots were fired, but none hit a light or customer. The Las Vegas Gazette said most of the witnesses claimed three shots were fired, but several others disputed that and were certain it was five shots.

It was about that time when Doc Holliday placed his cards face down on the table, drained his shot of whiskey and pushed back away from the table. He told his gambler companions he had some business to take care of. He asked his partner Webb to make sure no one took a look at his cards while he was gone. Holliday then went through the bat-wings and out to the street. He returned a few minutes later and the card game resumed. No one asked what happened outside the saloon and Holliday said nothing.

The Gazette said a large crowd of men had witnessed the shooting outside the dance hall, but nobody would confess that they knew who killed Gordon. At least, no one would admit that they knew. However, both the Las Vegas Optic and Bat Masterson said Holliday was the killer. Masterson remembered the shooting this way: "Gordon raised his revolver to fire, but before he could pull the trigger, 'Doc' had shot him dead." It is generally believed that Holliday had gone outside specifically to kill Gordon. After that last shot, Gordon's yelling and shouting abruptly ceased.

The Gazette went on to report that "an hour or two later, a Mr. Kennedy went into his tent, some thirty or forty yards away, to go to bed. After hearing groans outside, he went to investigate and found Gordon lying on the ground outside."

News of the shooting spread quickly and soon will fly over the prairies and will not come toward us. If they do come toward us, they will float away like dust in the air.' I turned to Major Whitside and said, 'That man is making mischief,' and repeated what he had said. Whitside replied, 'Go direct to Colonel Forsyth and tell him about it,' which I did.

Forsyth and I went to the circle of warriors where he told me to tell the medicine man to sit down and keep quiet, but he paid no attention to the order. Forsyth repeated the order. Big Foot's brother-in-law answered, 'He will sit down when he gets around the circle.' When the medicine man came to the end of the circle, he squatted down. A cavalry sergeant exclaimed, 'There goes an Indian with a gun under his blanket!' Forsyth ordered him to take the gun from the Indian, which he did. Whitside then said to me, 'Tell the Indians it is necessary that they be searched one at a time.' The young warriors paid no attention to what I told them. I heard someone on my left exclaim, 'Look out! Look out!' I saw five or six young warriors cast off their blankets and pull guns out from under them and brandish them in the air. One of the warriors shot into the soldiers, who were ordered to fire into the Indians. I looked in the direction of the medicine man. He or some other medicine man approached to within three or four feet of me with a long cheese knife, ground to a sharp point and raised to stab me. He stabbed me during the melee and nearly cut off my nose. I held him off until I could swing my rifle to hit him, which I did. I shot and killed him in self-defense.

Troop 'K' was drawn up between the tents of the women and children and the main body of the Indians, who had been summoned to deliver their arms. The Indians began firing into 'Troop K' to gain the canyon of Wounded Knee creek. In doing so they exposed their women and children to their own fire. Captain Wallace was killed at this time while standing in front of his troops. A bullet, striking him in the forehead, plowed away the top of his head. I started to pull off my nose, which was hung by the skin, but Lieutenant Guy Preston shouted, 'My God Man! Don't do that! That can be saved.' He then led me away from the scene of the trouble."

Why Have I Never Been Told This About Sciatica?

Your sciatic nerve is the longest and largest nerve in your body. It begins in your lower back as five smaller nerves joining together and extends to your pelvis, thigh, knee, calf, ankle, foot and toes. When this large nerve becomes inflamed the condition is called sciatica and the pain can be intense! There may be burning, prickling, and other sensations along the path of the nerve. Ironically, the leg may also feel numb!

The medical approach to sciatica is usually to treat its symptoms with painkillers, muscle relaxers and orthopedic procedures such as traction, physical therapy and surgery in extreme cases. Sciatica is particularly frustrating to treat with drugs because in many cases even strong painkillers bring little or no relief.

Vertebral subluxations (spinal nerve root irritation caused by spinal misalignment) can be directly related to sciatica. Chiropractors remove subluxations to relieve sciatic pain. Many sciatica sufferers have experienced dramatic relief after chiropractic care, and have found that chiropractic is superior to medical treatments.

Through July 15th only, the initial visit charge will be $65 or less (I normally charge new patients at least $179 - includes treatment).

Tell the receptionist you'd like to take advantage of our Sciatica Special before July 15, 2017.

Fort Lowell

Road Trip

Hafer, Company G, 14th U.S. Infantry, who named it Camp Lowell.

Tucson was a small dusty town in those days full of some very rough characters. The town was populated by miners, fortune seekers, prostitutes and camp followers. Drunkenness and disorder was rampant. It was so rough and bawdy that Captain Henry Brown could not maintain discipline among the troops with all the temptations of the town. This greatly aggravated General George Crook, his commanding officer.

In 1872 Crook dispatched a patrol to find a better site. The site selected was about seven miles northeast of downtown Tucson at the confluence of the Pantano and Tanque Verde washes where they become the Rillito River. The area provided an abundance of good water, wood and grass for the horses. He also marked off some eighty square miles of military reservation to ensure the water supply as well as to make sure other natural resources and supplies would be available to maintain a large army post. In 1873 Camp Lowell was moved to its new location and later designated a fort under the command of Lt. Col. Eugene Asa Carr.

Building was a slow process, and Malaria, whose cause was not yet identified, was rampant. Doctors manning the hospital cared more for victims of disease, diarrhea, and accidents than battle wounds. For some reason, probably out of boredom, these surgeons became naturalists, fascinated in particular by the birds in the area.

They identified many new species and sub species such as Bendire's Thrasher and the Rufous Winged Sparrow. Walter Reed, who later discovered the cause of Yellow Fever, was among this group of surgeons assigned to Fort Lowell.

Selection of the new site had not taken into consideration the many ranchers east of the fort who thought they had rights to the water, wood supply and grasses as well. Most worked out compromises with the soldiers, however many cut off water in the canals or allowed their cattle to foul it. The commanding officer at one point ordered

everyone in the saloon knew that something serious had happened. Gordon's girlfriend arrived by his side and had friends carry him to her room located east of the courthouse. At six o'clock on Sunday morning, Gordon died from his wound, a bullet to his chest. An inquest was held that afternoon by the coroner and the jury returned a verdict of excusable homicide.

The Las Vegas Optic said, "It will be remembered, especially by the pioneers of the East Side, that Doc Holliday was at one time the keeper of a gin-mill on Centre Street. Doc was always considered a shiftless, bagged-legged character—a killer and professional cutthroat. He is the identified individual who killed poor, inoffensive Mike

Gordon."

Holliday stayed in Las Vegas for another year. Then he abruptly abandoned his part of the saloon business and went south into Arizona. There, he joined up with his old friend Wyatt Earp in Tombstone. In 1881, he was involved in the famous shootout at the O.K. Corral. In the mid-1880s, he retired to a health resort in Colorado, but his tuberculosis only got worse and he died of the disease in 1887.

Fort Lowell

the shacks of the offenders burned.

As time passed the buildings at the fort were completed with amenities such as wood floors and tin roofs. Furniture from back east was brought in, even pianos; canals were dug supplying water to steam powered pumps. The camp had a hospital, storehouse, camp garden, horse barns and corals, a rifle range, and cottonwood lined parade ground. The fort became known as a desirable location where officers brought their families and raised their children. The fort boasted their own band with their own living quarters. This band became quite an attraction for the people of Tucson who came to the many concerts, dances and dinners hosted at the fort. A baseball team was organized; a great rivalry developed between them and teams from

Tucson.

Not only did the fort protect the people of Tucson from the Apaches, it also became the major supply depot for the other forts and army units in the area. At full capacity in 1886 it held four companies of the 4th Cavalry and the 8th Infantry with 18 officers and 229 enlisted men. Scout Company D, made up of Western Apaches, was also stationed there when they accompanied the Cavalry on patrol. The Western Apaches were rivals of the Chiracahua Apaches and the army used them as trackers.

The surrender of Geronimo at Fort Lowell to Brigadier General Nelson Miles on September 4, 1886 marked the end of major activity for the fort. General Crook's campaign against the Apaches was over and in 1891 the fort was decommissioned and turned over to the department of the interior with the troops and furnishings moved to Fort Wingate in New Mexico to help with the Hopi Uprising occurring at that time.

The abandoned fort buildings were eventually taken over by Mexican immigrants and Mormon settlers and a settlement called "El Fuerte" developed and thrived into the 1940s.

Today Fort Lowell is maintained as a Public Park and Museum. It is no longer miles from town; it is located at 2900 N. Craycroft Rd. in East Tucson.

Many of the old buildings remain and make for a great "TERRITORIAL ROAD TRIP."
