Judge Roy Bean

The Law West of the Pecos

By Richard W. Kimball

In January of 1883, the Southern Pacific Railroad extended its tracks eastward from Los Angeles into Texas where they connected to the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railway. The tracks met at a location about three miles west of the Pecos River. Two silver spikes were driven into the tracks to commemorate the first intercontinental rail line of the south. A grading camp called Eagle Nest was established at that point. The tent town was later renamed Langtry for George Langtry, a railroad engineer and foreman who supervised the work crews laying the tracks.

Once the east-west railroad was completed, a man named Roy Bean arrived in Langtry. He first built a canvas-covered saloon hoping to lubricate the throats of railroad men. A few months later, he built a more permanent wooden structure. In addition to a bar and several poker tables, it contained a jury box, and some public benches. After proclaiming himself as a judge, Bean used the saloon as his own private courtroom while serving as the community's justice of the peace and notary public. He called himself the "Law West of the Pecos."

He named his establishment "The Jersey Lilly" after a well-known British stage actress of the time, Lily Langtry, with whom the judge was infatuated. Unfortunately, the sign over the saloon entrance had a misspelling. The painter had mistakenly added an extra "L" to Lily's name. It is believed the sign was painted by a drunken sign painter who was apparently working off a fine. Although the community was named for George Langtry, a railroad man, Bean always claimed the town really honored the British actress.

Before he became a judge in Langtry, the life of Roy Bean was checkered. He was born about 1825 in Mason County, Kentucky. While still in his early 20's, he lived in Mexico for a while until he killed a man in Chihuahua City who liked to start fights with gringos. He next turned up in San Diego, California, and spent several months in jail after wounding a man in a duel. During his time languishing behind bars, some of the local women brought him gifts—mostly flowers, food, wine and cigars. One such gift caught him by surprise. It was a tamale with several knives hidden inside. He used the knives to dig a hole through the jail house wall. He escaped on April 17, 1852, and traveled to the Mission San Gabriel, just outside Los Angeles. His brother Joshua, who owned the Headquarters Saloon, hired Roy to work as a bartender. Joshua was killed in November during a squabble over a woman and Roy Bean inherited the saloon.

In 1854, Bean was involved in another shooting. This time, he killed a rival over the charms of a pretty Mexican girl. After the killing, the dead man's friends grabbed Bean and tied a rope around his neck. They took

Bill Cody Hunts Buffalo for the Railroad

Reprinted From: Buffalo Bill's Life Story: An Autobiography

By W. F. Cody

The western end of the Kansas Pacific was at this time in the heart of the buffalo country. Twelve hundred men were employed in the construction of the road. The Indians were very troublesome, and it was difficult to obtain fresh meat for the hands. The company therefore concluded to engage expert hunters to kill buffaloes.

Having heard of my experience and success as a buffalo hunter, Goddard Brothers, who had the contract for feeding the men, made me a good offer to become their hunter. They said they would require about twelve buffaloes a day—twenty-four hams and twelve humps, as only the hump and hindquarters of each animal were utilized. The work was dangerous. Indians were riding all over that section of the country, and my duties would require me to journey from five to ten miles from the railroad every day in order to secure the game, accompanied by only

Territorial Road Trip: Poston's Butte

By Ralph Henderson

This fun Territorial Road Trip is less than an hour drive from the East Valley to the Florence area and the gravesite of Charles Debrille Poston, 1825-1902. The gravesite is located atop a hill just outside Florence originally named Primrose Hill, but changed to Parscee Hill, and later called Poston's Folly. Today it bears the name of the Father of Arizona, Poston's Butte.

Charles Poston explored and mined Arizona from 1853 to 1861. Motivated by his silver interests and seeing a need for territorial status he successfully

The Arizona Trail

A ponderosa pine tree that once grew near Flagstaff germinated in 1531 and lived 434 years, according to a count of its tree rings after it was dead. It had a circumference of 93 inches.

The Navajo Tribe was at war with Spain in 1805. That year, 115 Navajos were killed by invading Spanish troops at a place in northern Arizona called Canyon de Chelly, Navajos continued attacking Spanish settlements in New Mexico, and, in 1819, they agreed to a peace treaty that soon was broken.

In the 1880s in southwest Arizona, Joe Johnson was prospecting with two other men. They were camped at Tule Well where there was water. Joe decided to try his luck alone near some mountains 12 miles east. He headed out into the bone dry desert with food and canteens of water carried by a burro.

Several hours later, he fell and broke his right leg. He managed to set the bone and make a splint, but he couldn't walk.

The burro was his only hope. Joe tied a red bandana around its neck and stopped giving it water from one of his canteens. When the burro got thirsty enough, it headed straight back to Tule Well. The other prospectors saw the bandana, knew Joe was in trouble, and went to save him.

To cure their ills 120 years ago, Flagstaff residents bought patent medicines containing up to 40% alcohol. Other medicines contained opium and morphine.

There were little silver bells hanging from Navajo cowboys' spurs early in the 20th Century. The bells tinkled when a man rode or walked.

The 1907 Arizona Territory legislature outlawed gambling halls and made it illegal for women to work in saloons or to even enter one.

During the 1910 4th of July celebration at Williams, cowboys galloped their horses up and down the streets. Havasupai Indian women from the Grand Canyon ran foot races wearing moccasins. There was a pole-raising contest between telegraph and telephone company employees.

Wild Bill Longley

Sadistic, Murderous Gunman

The sadistic and murderous western gunman William Preston Longley was born on October 16, 1815 in Austin County, Texas.

Little is known about the younger days of William Longley, or "Wild Bill" as he was later aptly called. It is certain, however, that before he was even 20 years old, Longley had already killed several men, and the evidence suggests he was probably what modern-day psychologists would term a psychopath. Notoriously short-tempered, Longley frequently killed for the most trivial of reasons. More than a few men died simply because he believed they had somehow slighted or insulted him, like an unarmed man named Thomas, who Longley murdered in cold blood for daring to argue with him over a card game. He had a particularly strong dislike of blacks, and African-Americans in Texas avoided him whenever possible.

Wherever Longley traveled he left behind a trail of pointless murders, but most of the details of his life are shrouded in myth and supposition. Legend has it that Longley was once hanged along with a horse thief; but shots fired back by the departing posse cut his rope, and he was saved. Reports that he was imprisoned for at least a time and once lived with the Ute Indians are more believable, though not confirmed.

After fleeing to Louisiana to escape punishment for killing a minister named Roland Lay, Longley was captured and returned to Lee County, Texas, where he was tried and found guilty of murder. Sentenced to hang, during his final days Longley became a Catholic, wrote long letters about his life, and claimed that he had actually only killed eight men. On the day of his execution, October 28, 1878, he climbed the steps to the gallows with a cigar in his mouth and told the gathered crowd that his punishment was just and God had forgiven him. After kissing the sheriff and priest and bidding farewell to the crowd, the noose was fitted around his neck, and he was hanged. Unfortunately, the rope slipped so that Longley's knees hit the ground, denying him a quick and painless death. After the hangman pulled the rope taut once more, the famous killer slowly choked to death. It took 11 minutes before he was finally pronounced dead.

him to a cottonwood grove where they fastened the other end of the rope to a convenient branch. They then rode away leaving him sitting alone on his horse. If the horse moved, he would most certainly hang. Luckily, the horse stayed in place. The Mexican girl, who was hiding in nearby bushes, came with a knife and cut Bean loose. The experience left him with a permanent rope burn on his neck,

Altos. Because they were Southern sympathizers, Bean and his brother assembled a band of friends they called "The Free Rovers." The Rovers prowled the area stealing cattle and other valuables. They converted most of their ill-gotten loot into supplies for the Confederacy. Residents in the area, however, called the group "The Forty Thieves" because they were really just criminal gunmen and rustlers.

After the war, Bean went to San Antonio, Texas. He lived there for 18 years trying various, but mostly unprofitable, schemes to get money. Some of the jobs he tried included: butcher, dairy operator, saloon-keeper and freighter. During that time, he spent so much time in and out of court filing, and generally losing, claims that he became quite knowledgeable about the law. Even though he was basically illiterate, such legal knowledge would be put to good use later in Langtry.

When he turned 42, Roy Bean decided to marry and settle down. The girl he married was 18-year-old Virginia Chavez, whose life with her hard-drinking husband was a living hell. Bean once beat her so badly that she asked the sheriff to arrest him. When the judge asked her to show her scars to the court, she refused so the case was one man with a light wagon to haul the meat back to camp. I demanded a large salary, which they could well afford to pay, as the meat itself would cost them nothing. Under the terms of the contract which I signed with them, I was to receive five hundred dollars a month, agreeing on my part to supply them with all the meat they wanted.

I at once began my career as a buffalo hunter for the Kansas Pacific. It was not long before I acquired a considerable reputation, and it was at this time that the title "Buffalo Bill" was conferred upon me by the railroad hands. Of this title, which has stuck to me through life, I have never been ashamed.

During my engagement as hunter for the company, which covered a period of eighteen months, I killed 4,280 buffaloes and had many exciting adventures with the Indians, including a number of hairbreadth escapes, some of which are well worth relating. . .

[One] adventure which deserves a place in these reminiscences occurred near the Saline River. My companion at the time was Scotty, the butcher who accompanied me on my hunts to cut up the meat and load it on the wagon for hauling to the railroad camp. I had killed fifteen buffaloes, and we were on our way home with a wagonload of meat when we were jumped by a big band of Indians.

I was mounted on a splendid horse belonging to the company, and could easily have made my escape, but Scotty had only the mule team which drew the wagon as a means of flight, and of course I could not leave him.

To think was to act in those days, Scotty and I had often talked of what we would do in case of a sudden attack, and we forthwith proceeded to carry out the plan we had made. Jumping to the ground, we unhitched the mules more quickly than that operation had ever been performed before. The mules and my horse we tied to the wagon. We threw the buffalo hams on the ground and piled them about the wheels so as to form a breastwork. Then, with an extra box of ammunition and three or four extra revolvers which we always carried with us, we crept under the wagon, prepared to give our visitors a reception they would remember.

On came the Indians, but when they got within a hundred yards of us we opened such a sudden and galling fire that they held up and began circling about us. Several times they charged.

lobbied Washington, D.C., for a territorial government. In 1863, Poston was appointed the first Superintendent of Indian Affairs by President Lincoln, as well as a civilian aid to General Heintzelman, and one of the first delegates to Congress from the new territory. In 1864, tired of mining and with his congressional term completed, he ran for re-election, but was unsuccessful. He then took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1867.

Sometime between 1867 and 1878, Poston traveled to India and fell into a strange cult of fire worshippers. Upon his return to Arizona in 1878, President Rutherford B. Hays appointed him the Registrar of the United States land office in Florence. He set out to construct a temple on top of a hill north of Florence called Primrose Hill. Renaming it Parscee Hill, Poston had visions of constructing a "temple to the sun" whereupon he built a continuous fire. The flames died out several months later, the temple was never constructed and the whole project was mocked as Poston's Folly.

In 1890 he served as the consular agent at El Paso, Texas. In 1902 he passed away and was buried in the Arizona Cemetery. In 1925 history finally gave Charles Poston the recognition he deserved when his body was relocated to the top of the hill outside Florence. Parscee Hill was renamed Poston's Butte and his body placed under a huge stone cairn erected by the state of Arizona.

To reach this interesting site, travel one mile north out of Florence on Hwy 79. Cross the Gila River (which you will recognize by the bridge, there is seldom any water in the Gila) and continue .1 mile; turn left near milepost 136. This road, commonly called Hunt Highway, leads off to the west. Go about 1.5 miles from the turn off. You will see on your right a dirt road leading under the railroad tracks. At this point you need to exercise some judgment. Should you decide to park and walk, the half-mile walk is not difficult. The road up the butte is fairly steep with some loose rock and an elevation gain of about 300 feet. While quite easy in any four-wheel-drive vehicle, if you decide to hike, go slow, enjoy the fantastic views and be careful. The hike up Poston's Butte is a very fun Territorial experience you will be glad you made.

Little Mesa Cafe Holds Benefit Breakfast for Penny

Penny Collins, an East Valley resident, wife, mother, and grandmother has been diagnosed with cancer at age 46. In May 2016 Penny had a CVA stroke. She thankfully did not suffer paralysis, however long term effects include vertigo, short-term memory loss, headaches, and she now takes blood thinners which make her a high risk for surgical procedures.

Just when things were getting "somewhat" better, Penny was diagnosed with an aggressive form of breast cancer. After multiple surgeries the doctors detected precancerous cells in her lymph nodes in May 2017 and began chemotherapy. She began radiation in August. There is a high risk of the cancer reoccurring.

Penny is no longer able to work and her husband, Scott, is taking so much time off work to take care of his wife that they've lost their home and car. The family is going through very hard times financially.

Penny needs our help.

The Little Mesa Cafe is hosting a benefit breakfast on Saturday, October 21, from 7:00 a.m. - 1:00 p.m. One half of the proceeds for all pancakes sold will go to help Penny and her family. Food specials, door prizes, and raffles will be offered to all. Penny is a fighter and will not give up hope. This is a great opportunity to help someone in our own community.

For 33 years, the Little Mesa Cafe, a local, family-owned and operated Family Restaurant, has played an active role in our Mesa and Arizona community. Your participation, donations, gift certificates, and door prizes are greatly appreciated. For more info contact David at the Little Mesa Cafe, 3929 E. Main St., Mesa, Arizona (480-830-6201)

Biscuits lives up to its name with their fluffy biscuits, "SOS," liver and onions, and many other local favorites. They use local and organic ingredients whenever possible with no preservatives. dismissed. The Beans were finally divorced in 1881. They had five children.

In 1882, as he neared 60, Roy Bean moved to west Texas. In a small community called Vinagaroon, he got himself appointed as justice of the peace. Although he had no book learning, he knew how courts worked because he had been in and out of courtrooms for most of his life. Vinagaroon, however, was a temporary camp along the railroad tracks and the town eventually died as the railroad crews moved on down the line. Bean then went on to Eagle Nest, another stop-over on the tracks. When the town, which had become permanent, was renamed as Langtry, Bean would often brag that it had been named after Lily Langtry.

Bean built a saloon in Langtry. Since he was already a justice of the peace, he set up a rustic courtroom inside the building, complete with a jury box and benches.

He had a sign nailed over the entrance that proclaimed "The Law West of the Pecos" so there would be no doubt that the saloon was also a courtroom. Judge Roy Bean ran his courtroom the way he saw fit for 20 years—except for the time when his rival Jesus Torres took over the office in 1886 because of an election discrepancy. It seems Bean had somehow received more votes than there were people voting. The judgeship was awarded to Torres. Judge Bean refused to turn over his law book and seal of office to his opponent. He just kept on dispensing justice as he always did. Bean tried his cases on the north side of town while Torres was on the south side. Eventually Torres gave up because most people preferred Bean's courtroom.

Judge Roy Bean was always finding new ways to make money. For instance, when he started an "information bureau" in the saloon for travelers, many a hapless soul would discover he would need to pay for any advice received. Once, while performing an inquest on a dead man, the judge searched the man's pockets and found $40 in cash and a small pistol. He then fined the corpse $40 for illegally carrying a hidden firearm.

Bean could turn his saloon into a courtroom by simply walking across the room. He just took off his bartender's apron, threw an alpaca coat over his shoulders and court was in session. Although he could not read, he often sought inspiration by thumbing through the tattered pages of his law book, the Revised Statutes of the State of Texas. When

Their shots killed the two mules and my horse. But we gave it to them right and left, and had the satisfaction of seeing three of them fall to the ground not more than fifty feet away.

When we had been cooped up in our little fort for about an hour we saw the cavalry coming toward us, full gallop, over the prairie. The Indians saw the soldiers almost as soon as we did. Mounting their horses, they disappeared down the canyon of the creek. When the cavalry arrived we had the satisfaction of showing them five Indians who would be "good" for all time. Two hours later we reached the camp with our meat, which we found to be all right, although it had a few bullets and arrows embedded in it.

Soon after the adventure with Scotty I had my celebrated shooting contest with Billy Comstock, a well-known guide, scout, and interpreter. Comstock, who was chief of scouts at Fort Wallace, had a reputation of being a successful buffalo hunter, and his friends at the fort—the officers in particular—were anxious to back him against me.

It was arranged that I should shoot a match with him, and the preliminaries were easily and satisfactorily arranged. We were to hunt one day of eight hours, beginning at eight o'clock in the morning. The wager was five hundred dollars a side, and the man who should kill the greater number of buffaloes from horseback was to be declared the winner. Incidentally my title of "Buffalo Bill" was at stake.

The hunt took place twenty miles east of Sheridan. . .Buffaloes were plentiful. It had been agreed that we should go into the herd at the same distance and make our runs, each man killing as many animals as possible. A referee followed each of us, horseback, and counted the buffaloes killed by each man.

For the first run we were fortunate in getting good ground. Comstock was mounted on his favorite horse. I rode old Brigham. I felt confident that I had the advantage in two things: first, I had the best buffalo horse in the country; second, I was using what was known at the

A Marriage Boom

The Western land rush of the mid-1800s brought many settlers from the East looking for a new life. For a bride on the frontier, the familiar wedding ceremony was just a prelude to an unknown life ahead.

Getting married was also appealing for men. In some areas where a man's only human companions were other men, the march to the altar sometimes resembled a stampede when marriageable females arrived. Ridiculing the frenzied wife seeking of the early Pacific Northwest, one woman said men proposed to "tearful widows of a fortnight and to little girls busy with mud pies."

Laws that promoted westward expansion sparked a rash of marriages for reasons other than romance. Under the Donation Land Act of 1850 in Oregon Territory a husband and wife were entitled to twice the acreage a single man could claim. A wife also meant extra hands—her own and those of the children who would follow—to make the improvements required by law on a homesteader's claim.

Ironically, the marriage that provided companionship and free labor often cast women into a life, as one rancher's wife said, "lonely in the extreme."

Weddings provided a rare occasion for isolated women to enjoy a formal social event. Buoyed by the festivities, the bride assumed the role that her marriage certificate described as "helpmeet." As a frontier wife, her future would be a continual test of "for better or worse."

time as a needle-gun, a breech-loading Springfield rifle, caliber .50. This was "Lucretia Borgia". . . Comstock's Henry rifle, though it could fire more rapidly than mine, did not, I felt certain, carry powder and lead enough to equal my weapon in execution.

When the time came to go to the herd, Comstock and I dashed forward, followed by the referees. The animals separated. Comstock took the left bunch, I the right. My great forte in killing buffaloes was to get them circling by riding my horse at the head of the herd and shooting their leaders. Thus the brutes behind were crowded to the left, so that they were soon going round and round.

This particular morning the animals were very accommodating. I soon had them running in a beautiful circle. I dropped them thick and fast till I had killed thirty-eight, which finished my run.

Comstock began shooting at the rear of the buffaloes he was chasing, and kept on in a straight line. He succeeded in killing twenty-three, but they were scattered over a distance of three miles. The

Judge Roy Bean

Judge

a railroad man was brought before the judge for killing a Chinese laborer, Bean opened his law book pretending to find an appropriate ruling. Finally he placed the worn law book back on his desk and said, "There ain't a damn line here no wheres that makes it illegal to kill a Chinaman. The defendant is discharged." The defendant, who was a good customer at the bar, invited everyone back to the bar to share drinks in celebration of his acquittal.

For years, Judge Roy Bean kept an old magazine picture of Lily Langtry tacked to the wall of his saloon. In 1888, he finally saw her in person when she appeared at a San Antonio theater while touring America. He took a bath, put on his best mail-order suit and took a train to San Antonio. He bought a front-row seat so he could admire his idol. That experience was the highlight of his life.

In the early spring of 1903, Judge Roy Bean died. He spent the last few years of his life in a rocking chair on the porch of his saloon. He always had a shotgun on his lap and spent his time drinking and reminiscing. On March 16, after a night of heavy drinking with friends, he died of heart complications.

About eight months after the judge's death, Lily Langtry finally visited his saloon in Langtry, Texas. She got off the train and some of the local townspeople gave her a tour of the unusual courtroom where the old judge held court. They presented her with the old judge's revolver which she took back to England and displayed in a place of honor as a reminder of the strange Texas judge who held such a fascination with her talent and beauty.

"I only wish now I could have come sooner," Miss Langtry said as she re-boarded the train back at the depot. "It was a short visit but, an unforgettable one."

Cody Hunts Buffalo

animals I had shot lay close together.

While we were resting we espied another herd approaching. It was a small drove, but we prepared to make it serve our purpose. The buffaloes were cows and calves, quicker in their movements than the bulls. We charged in among them, and I got eighteen to Comstock's fourteen.

After a luncheon we resumed the hunt. Three miles distant we saw another herd. I was so far ahead of my competitor now that I thought I could afford to give an exhibition of my skill. Leaving my saddle and bridle behind, I rode, with my competitor, to windward of the buffaloes.

I soon had thirteen down, the last one of which I had driven close to the wagons, where the ladies were watching the contest. It frightened some of the tender creatures to see a buffalo coming at full speed directly toward them, but I dropped him in his tracks before he got within fifty yards of the wagon. This finished my run with a score of sixty-nine buffaloes for the day. Comstock had killed forty-six.

Comstock and his backers gave up the idea of beating me. The referee declared me the winner of the match, and the champion buffalo hunter of the Plains.

In May, 1868, the Kansas Pacific track was pushed as far as Sheridan. Construction was abandoned for the time, and my services as buffalo hunter were no longer required. A general Indian war was now raging all along the Western borders. Scouts and guides were once more in great demand, and I decided to go back to my old calling.
